ROWLEY

ROWLEY

The name Rowley appeared in Shropshire, England, before the Norman invasion, 1066. A Roger Rowlowe, standard bearer to Simon de Montford, was slain in the battle of Eversham in 1265.

King Charles II named his favorite horse, "Mr. Rowley" in honor of a well-loved friend. His Majesty used the name "Mr. Rowley" when traveling incognito. The present Queen Mother Elizabeth of Britain calls her pet spaniel, "Mr. Rowley". Many remember the old nursery rhyme, ending, "Heigho, says Anthony Rowley".

Family names were established for one and all after the Norman invasion, 1066. William, the Conqueror, decreed that all persons should have a surname and a Christian name and be signed into a book, later called Domesday Book, for purposes of taxation. The meaning of names is an interesting study by itself.

The spelling was as varied as were other surnames. Rowley, Rowell, Rouloux, Roulowe, Rowlowe, Rowly, Ruly and other forms appear, often four spellings in one record.

Henry Rowley is the first of the name in Massachusetts about 1630. His son, Moses, married one of the Fuller daughters and moved into Haddam, Connecticut. Thomas Rowley made his first record by marrying a daughter of Henry Denslow in 1669 in Windsor, Conn. It is of this Thomas' descendants that this manuscript is written. It has sometimes been difficult to untangle the Thomas Rowley from the Moses Rowley descendants.

The Connecticut State Library has been very helpful. The Barbour Collection of Church Records; the Hale Collection of Connecticut Cemetery Records; the Connecticut Census to 1850; the newspaper clippings of marriages and deaths; the Probate Records have all been consulted. Many Rowley families have contributed contemporary information. Hazel Sproul Wright, (Mrs. Norman E.) daughter of Gertrude (Rowley) Sproul has contributed by typing and checking these records and obtaining data from the past and present generations of Sproul and Wright families. Mrs. Wright has four children and twelve grandchildren, all descendants, on the distaff side, of Thomas Rowley.

May this bit of research give to the descendants some degree of the excitement that has been mine in finding this data. It has opened for me interests in social movements and economic pressures, their causes and effects.

To Thomas Rowley and his descendants I dedicate this manuscript.

ANNA M. ROWLEY

Hiram Edward joined his brother, Rolland, in Lorain, O. where he built wharves along the shores of Lake Erie. Later on a visit to his sister, Abigail Grant of Rockville, Conn. he bought a farm in Windsorville and brought his family there. He later bought the "Mill Property" on the curve of the road where the stream had been dammed to form a pond for running a mill. This mill had burned down, but the large house was left standing. There was also a small building which Hiram turned into a store and Post Office. This house was almost directly across the road from the Methodist Church where he served as Deacon, and his wife, as treasurer, and his daughters sang in the choir.
